Public WOW

You can see the activity and movement happening in the physical library, but what you can't see is what's happening behind the scenes... until now. These real-time displays represent the traffic on the catalog, our website, and on Digital Case. There are also statistics representing our real-time circulation and door statistics. This helps to tell the complete story of Kelvin Smith Library and services it provides to the campus and to the world.

This display represents translates all of the IP addresses that hit our website since midnight of the current day. From that data, glowing explosions are created from a random color pool from where the search originates. The scale of the explosions is based upon how many times that location has been searched from. If the location is a new one, a line from KSL to the search location is drawn to emphasize the online connection.

Kelvin Smith Library would like to thank The Mano M. Momo Fund for the Innovation and Application of Advanced Information Technologies, which provided generous support for this display.
