2. If you have a mission statement or similar description of your program, please include it here:

The UO Libraries' Digital Research, Education, and Media (DREAM) Lab is the university's digital scholarship center. Managed by the Digital Scholarship Services Department, it is a donor-funded initiative intended to facilitate, support, and offer collaboration opportunities for faculty and graduate students working on digital scholarship and public-facing research and education projects. The DREAM Lab offers support for everything from learning more about open digital scholarship methodologies to acquiring funds for open access scholarly publishing. Find support for your next project, whether it's a digital exhibit, digital archives or collections, data dashboard, book companion website, interactive eBook, new open access journal, or another new open digital scholarly research or classroom initiative.

3. What would you like to offer next?	I want to offer useful scholarly infrastructure to faculty & students -- research data support in the traditional sense (repository, curation, preservation) and less-traditional sense (something like Domain of One's Own, on-demand cloud computing resources for stuff that DO^3 won't support) and to re-launch our Digital Scholarship Center. It was established in 2013, but without permanent staff, budget, or a scholarly mission or theme or connection to campus, it had something of an identity crisis with the creation of the Digital Scholarship Services department within the Libraries. I think the Digital Scholarship Center needs to be part of the /university,/ and I think it needs a focus, not just whoever comes in with an awesome idea, as cool as that can be!
